THE GAZETTE. MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 26.

SELF REPRESSION. - A French lady once told me the following anecdote on the subject of controlling the temper: There was a regi-ment of huseahs formed with a new and elegant uniform; they wore a white dolman braided with gold. The garment was very dear, and young men with slender purses could not often renew it. A young man of good family, though poor, enlisted in this regiment. He went quickly through all the grades, and was at last named officer. His parents gave him all their spare money for his equipments. He wore this splendid costume, of which he was not a little proud, for the first time at a dinner at his colonel's. He was an intelligent fellow, though as violent as gunpowder. He was placed at table near the mistress of the house on account of his new grade; he began to talk with much gayety and diverting originality. One of the dishes was served with a dark colored sauce. The servant who was performing the butler's functions took up the dish from the table to carve it; he stooped badly, the dish leaned on one side, and all the sauce fell on the young officer's shoulder. In the twinkling of an eye all the consequences of the terrible misfortune presented themselves to his imagination; he saw himself ruined, for he had not the means of buying another dolman. The blood flew to his face and blinded him; he got up in a fury, gave his chair a kick, and took his serviette by one hand to strike the servant. Happily, his eye met that of the colonel fixed upon him; he saw all the consequences of what he was about to do. His expression changed as if by enchantment; he held out his serviette to the stupefied valet, and said in an amiable tone, "Will you wipe my dolman, please?"—The Young Englishwoman.
